“ Job interview processes are getting longer across the world. Hiring policies of employers can have a large effect on the length of the interview process. Each additional screening step adds a significant amount to the average time required for interview processes, in some cases adding a full week to the job interview process. The only job interview method known to reduce time-to-hire is the video interview.

- Glassdoor

“ Video recruiting solutions can improve recruiter and hiring manager productivity as well as better use the resources that are involved in the interview process. This results in lower time to hire and lower cost per hire. Also, video may also improve quality of the hire as visual cues may indicate something earlier in the hiring process that allows more time focused on better fit candidates.

Why video recruitment works for...

Recruiters

Despite limitations in scheduling options and available time, recruiters still spend a lot of time and money on a huge number of face-to-face job interviews. With online job interviews they can save expenses and talk to more candidates in less time.

Hiring managers

Hiring managers often waste valuable time in job interviews with candidates that are not the right match for the position. Video pre-screening increases the chance that only the best candidates are invited for an on-site interview.

Candidates

Today's candidate demands a quick, efficient, and accessible process. Video interviews offer a way to create a flexible and more candidate-friendly interview process. With a highly personal candidate experience and strong employer branding.
